Peter Charles Hoffer

The Revolutionary generation saw themselves as “a special breed of men” who created a distinctive long history, ancient folklore, common religion, or shared ethnicity. In Common Sense 1776, Thomas Paine asserted that “Europe, not England, is the parent had selected a new people to regenerate the world.